Praying that the ones you left behind can find some comfort and peace through your passing. God's Will for you is bigger than anything we can understand and I have to trust that you're onto better things up in Heaven.*

“ There are very few things as precious, as your very first friend. You know that you can always find that feeling of 'home', your secrets are safe and you have a comfortable, much needed shoulder but as the years pass, you forget how much you relied on your friend for the priceless things. You don't realize that the time spent together, will one day be memories that you can smell, and laughter that you will hear when you're all alone... His arm extended, he nudged his head in a come hither motion, presenting to me my first school desk. What he gave to me was irreplaceable although just a seat in a classroom. I was given acceptance, without hesitation. I had a friend, from that day forth. If I knew then, what I know now, I'd have told him how much that meant to me, how his smile was the only thing in the room that I saw. I wouldn't have let the years go by without reminding him of how he made me feel like I was 'okay', just a little less awkward, than a 5 year old girl. Thank you, Colin, for just being you. Thank you, Lynn, for blessing us with such a genuine human being. My heart holds onto your laughter, my soul feels your smile... Until we meet again.

“ Colin was my neighbor for the last few months. When he moved in he knocked on my door and introduced himself. He was unfailingly helpful to a septuagenarian who is increasingly infirm and unsteady on his feet. He would pick up parcels and newspapers and hold them in his apartment until I returned. I am going to miss his smile and I regret his demise at such an early age.
